

OUR BABY'S JOURNEY.

Our baby has taken a journey to-night To a mystic land up yonder.
Whose moonlit valleys are hidden quite By the dreamy clouds of wonder.
And how did he go? and pray, is it far?
Did he travel alone, and the way?
Ah! yes, but I noted each turn in the way So well, that perhaps it's not boasting to say I might take the same journey myself.

The way is not far; but he started at dusk, When the twilight stars were peeping Most timidly through their curtain of blue, Behind which they lay all day sleeping.
Then far, far way, 'cross the plains of day, Came the sand-man, so silent and lone;
And to baby's surprise, both his big shining eyes Were soon filled with the dust he had sown.

Yet he tarried awhile, by the peck-a-boo stile;
There a spray from the "drowsy fountain" Seemed to dim the light in his eyes so bright; Then a shadow from good-night mountain Fell over the boy, then on, right on.
Surprised, I sat silent and wonder,
'Neath the starlit arches of yonder; He calmly glides without murmur or cry, Right into the land up yonder.

But I trust in the morn, o'er the sun-kissed strand, Our loved babe will return from the slumber land —Mrs. Mary Felton, In Good Housekeeping.

UNCLE GEORGE'S VISIT.

The "Relative" Whom All Delighted to Honor.

You would have thought he was the prince of Wales, or at least a lord or a duke, by the way they treated him.
But he wasn't. There was nothing blue-blooded or princely about him.
He was only plain George Lewis, a rough, hardened old miner, who had gone to the Black Hills when he was a boy, and by long years of toil had amassed a fortune.

And now he had come east to enjoy and visit with his fashionable but by no means wealthy relations.

"Mr. Leslie," said gentleman's wife announced one evening at the dinner table, "my uncle George, whom I have never seen, is coming to visit us within a few weeks, and he says he may stay a month or two, and may conclude to make his home with us if—"

"Make his home with us?" snorted Mr. Leslie, putting down his cup of coffee with a vicious jerk. "Well, I guess not. I don't object to your poor relations coming here once in awhile for a few days, but as for one quarter-ing himself with us for the rest of his natural lifetime it's too much. Haven't I told you—"

"If it's agreeable," went on Mrs.
Leslie, calmly resuming at the point where she had been interrupted by her irate spouse, as though nothing had happened.

"And he says that he has made a large fortune and thinks, as he is over sixty years of age and in rather poor health, he wants to enjoy a few years of rest before he dies."

No stage transformation scene was ever half so wonderful as the change that took place on the chubby face of Mr. Leslie. His gray side-whiskers fairly bristled with new-found joy.

But he tried hard to conceal his change of sentiment. That was diplomacy. And one of Mr. Leslie's fondest delusions was that he was a second Machiavelli.

"Well, I guess we can find room for him. How would it do to put him in the front room upstairs? Don't you think it ought to be repapered, Mrs.
Leslie?" said the husband.

And, of course, Mrs. Leslie, who had been asking for such an improvement for some weeks, eagerly assented and thanked her stars for more than one reason that her uncle was coming.

"Won't it be splendid to have him here?" said Miss Florence Leslie, a rather tall, stately young woman, whose ideas ran much to society.
"Maybe now I'll get that pair of diamond earrings I have been waiting for so long."

"He may be such a horrid old guy we shall all be ashamed of him," suggested slangy Miss Bessie, a year younger than her sister Florence. "Fancy him sitting on our veranda with a big slouch hat and his trousers tucked into his boots when the De Goodleys drive by.
How they will laugh at us!"

"Do you think Uncle George would buy me a pair of ponies, mamma?" queried young Robert, who, though but nine years of age, appeared keenly alive to the situation.

Uncle George came. He was a very modest, unassuming gentleman, with a bronzed face and the quiet ways of a man who has been an exile from society for years. And, strange to say, he was rather averse to talking about the family history.

"He's a very modest man, Uncle George is," said Mrs. Leslie, explaining this peculiarity to a neighbor. "But do you know," she said, in a mysterious whisper, "he must be very wealthy. I know he must be getting ready to make us some splendid present. For I saw him counting over an enormous roll of bills the other day, as though he were studying what to buy."

Mr. Leslie, too, was likewise eagerly expectant. He had really begun to like Uncle George—at least he thought he did.

And so it went down to the youngest member of the family. Uncle George, it must be owned, fared pretty well.

They even gave a grand party in honor of the newly arrived relation from the west. All their friends were invited. The enterers were given carte blanche. It was really a fine affair.

"We wish to spare no pains to make my dear uncle feel at home," said Mrs.
Leslie to her friend, Mrs. Gordon, that night.

"To make him feel at home," echoed Mr. Leslie. "It is our aim to make his last days as pleasant as possible—you know he is getting old—for he has seen rough times out in the west, and has earned a good rest. I'll warrant."

The fact is this was a trifle hypocritical on the part of Mr. Leslie. Truth was he was beginning to get a little anxious over the fact that Uncle George was not making any lavish expenditures of his vast wealth.

In another part of the house that night there was another interesting situation. It was "behind" a huge bank of ferns and palms that the vivacious

Miss Bessie was explaining to her betrothed, Frank Jewett, all about the new-found relative.

"You must be very good to him, Frank," she was saying. "Of course I know he is a horrid-looking old fellow and he dresses like a scarecrow and he's as stupid as a stick and all that; but then he's rich and we all want to keep on the good side of him. If it wasn't for that we wouldn't have him in the house."

"But papa is going to let him make his home with us, and when he dies he will surely leave us all his money. And I wouldn't be a particle surprised, if we keep in his good graces, if he would furnish our house for us from cellar to garret when you and I are married."

Was that a faint chuckle that came from the other side of the thick bank of ferns and palms?

One morning Uncle George failed to come down to breakfast. This was not an unusual thing, for Mr. Leslie's avuncular relative was in the habit of taking long morning strolls, "just to brace up my appetite a bit," he would explain.

But when he failed to come back to lunch, to dinner—when night arrived and still no Uncle George—Mrs. Leslie began to be alarmed.

"I am afraid something has happened to him," she said to her husband. "He is not very well acquainted in the city.
Who knows but he may have been robbed and murdered?"

So Mr. Leslie hunted up the chief of detectives and reported the mysterious disappearance. He described the missing man.

"Was the gentleman's right forefinger missing up to the middle point?" asked the chief.

"Yes," replied Mr. Leslie, wondering how the chief knew that fact.

"And he had a sort of innocent, rustic, modest air about him?"

"Yes, yes," said the other; "you have found him, then?"

"No," replied the detective with a quizzical smile, "but I wish I could. Is this his picture?" he asked, pointing to a photograph which he had selected from a large brown book.

"The very man!" exclaimed Mr. Leslie. "Has anything happened to him?
How did you come by his picture?"

"The gentleman has the distinction of having his photograph in the rogues' gallery," was the quiet reply.

"Rogues' gallery! Why, what do you mean, man?" gasped Mr. Leslie. "He is my wife's uncle."

"Can you prove that?" queried the chief.

"Why, yes—that is—well"—stammered the now thoroughly astounded man. New light was thrown on a thousand little circumstances of Uncle George's visit and actions.

"I tell you," continued the detective, pitily; "this man is Louis Rebesteise, one of the sharpest confidence men in the country, who makes a business of this sort of work. He has been missing for some time, and I suppose he has been out west, where he probably met the real Uncle George and learned enough of your family story to play his little game."

"If you search your home you will probably find that all your silverware, jewelry and money are gone, or at least as much of them as one man can carry away."

The chief's surmise was correct. The choice old family plate, Mrs. Leslie's jewelry and two hundred dollars which Mr. Leslie had taken in the day before after banking hours—all were gone; loss eight hundred dollars.

In their place was a little note pinned to one pillow of the bed lately occupied by the departed. It read:

I must be off. Have enjoyed myself hugely.
Sorry I can't leave you my vast fortune. No, Bessie, I am afraid I won't furnish your house from cellar to garret this year, if you did try to keep on the good side of your horrid-looking old Uncle George.
P. S.—Good-by.

THE FLOOR WALKER.

A Polite Individual Who Does the Gallant.

The floor walker in a large dry goods house has come to be regarded as an indispensable adjunct to that class of establishments. He assumes a position near the main entrance of the store, and when a lady, or several ladies, enter the emporium he takes half a dozen steps forward, bows gracefully, smiles and lends an attentive ear while a feminine voice exclaims:
"We wish to look at some dress goods, please." "Ah, yes," he replies, "this way, if you please. Delightful morning, isn't it? Air is so bracing. Mr. Browne, show the ladies some dress goods. Trust you will be pleased, ladies. Pray let me know if there's anything else I can do for you," and then he flits back to his place up front, only to go through the same performance, with slight variations, several hundred times a day.

All of the regular patrons of the store where he is employed are known personally to the floor walker and such he invariably addresses by name, while for a favored few he always has a choice bit of gossip which he imparts as he guides them to the department which they seek. It goes without saying that the floor walker is extremely punctilious about his personal appearance, and of him it may be truthfully said that he is "the glass of fashion and the mold of form." That he is the envied one of all the salesmen in the store is a fact that is not open to doubt, for in all reason it must be far pleas-anter and much more agreeable to spend one's time piloting fair dames to this part of the store and that than it is to stand behind a counter all day long and measure tape or ribbon, and de-scant on the beauties of gingham and calico. But all dry goods clerks can't be floor walkers, any more than every member of a brass band can be a drum major, and so I would say to the large number of young men in Detroit who are putting in ten or twelve hours a day selling dry goods, be faithful, be attentive, be polite, be prompt, and let it shall come to pass that some day you, too, shall be floor walkers and enjoy all the felicities of that position.—

NOTICE.

Having given options and sold as supposed in good faith by a deed "in escrow" to the Pittsburgh Development Company, latterly merged into the Elliston Development Company, certain lands located at and near what was known as Big Spring Depot, Montgomery county, Va., for the purpose of building a town.
Now the undersigned, through this medium, and in justice to himself, and in order to satisfy the enquiries of many innocent purchasers of lots upon said lands, gives notice that the said Elliston Development Company has not complied with their contract as to payment of the aforesaid land, and no deed can be valid or in force until such obligations are fulfilled. It was thought that the assessments upon the company's stock (fully paid up by the undersigned as to his holdings) would be amply sufficient to liquidate all claims in this direction; but, owing to the entire destruction of the only plant by fire, valued at some twenty to twenty-five thousand dollars, without any insurance, and other outside claims, appears to have destroyed all hope, and rather seems to have given a desire on the part of many stockholders to sue for what they conceive to be their just rights rather than to pay further on the stock.

Trusting the above information will acquaint purchasers and others interested as to the true condition of affairs, I remain yours respectfully,
LAND AND STOCK HOLDER.
